In my opinion...

Gordon Barland

- The widespread expansion of polygraph for screening job applicants, especially by police and intelligence organizations.

- The development of standardized protocols, including institutionalized quality control. [The demise of "Nobody else can read my charts."]

- The explosion in polygraph usage by many (most?) countries worldwide.

- The development of resistance, initially by union/legislative action, later by countermeasure literature and personalized training.